Mr Tan had a garden with many fruit trees which attracted the children in the neighbourhood. However, because of Mr Tan's grumpy face, children were afraid of him. They would run away quickly whenever he was spotted. A few lucky ones did manage to get away with some fruits from his garden.

One evening, my sister and I decided to take a short cut through Mr Tan's 5 garden as we had to be on time for Grandmother's birthday celebration at home. We were walking halfway through the garden when we heard, "Hey, you two!" in a gruff, low voice. We froze in our tracks. We were face-to-face, for the first time, with the elderly man. Our knees were shaking.

"Come here," said Mr Tan as he reached up to one of his apple trees. To 10 our surprise, he held out several ripe, juicy apples. We stared at them in delight. "Take these home," he said. My sister and I hesitantly took them, thanked him and hurriedly made our way home.

Since then, each time we walked through his garden, we would receive plenty of fruits from Mr Tan. We realised that we had found a hidden treasure in 15 him. Mr Tan might look stern but hidden behind that face was a kind and generous soul. My sister and I learned never to judge a person by his looks.

This time, Callum fell hard on the ground. Upon seeing this, I gasped in 5 shock. After a few moments, Callum got up. I heaved a sigh of relief.

I recalled the day when Callum, my son, first asked if he could play rugby. It caught me by surprise. I was terrified and felt worried for his safety. He was only ten years old. Personally, I did not like the sport. It had the highest number of injuries among all the sports activities. I told Callum to choose another sport 10 like basketball or badminton.

Callum wanted to play rugby so much that he kept asking for my permission but I was reluctant to agree. Callum was tall for his age. He told me that his height was an advantage in the sport. On the field, he would tower over the other players. They were also not as fast as he was. Callum knew that he 15 would do well in this sport.

Touched by his determination to do something that was difficult, I gave in eventually. After watching all the matches he had played in, I had to admit that I had made the right choice to allow him to play rugby. I was proud of Callum for being fearless and not giving up the sport that he loved. 20
